That's right, I said it.

A CATCHY PHRASE TO ACCOMPANY YOUR CLEVER PRANKS.

Modern Use

A word used instead of saying:"fooled you!" after a prank. It first appeared in the series of "The Big Bang Theory" and is used by the character named Sheldon. It comes from the word "zing" which means to fool or rediculous someone. and just for a cool slang, the added the "ba" to it. And later the series added the "a" to it, and then it became "Bazinga".

Apparent Source

"A seven-stringed harp", as referenced by Will Cuppy in the first chapter about the Pharaoh Cheops or Khufu, in his book "The Decline and Fall of Practically Everybody." Dorset Press, New York, 1950. Cuppy was most certainly kidding, since the book was a satire, but I felt it was important to know that the fabrication of the term preceded "The Big Bang Theory" by about 60 years.

Some Times to Use

- Pantsing
- Filling Purse with Random Goods
- Correcting someone trying to correct you
- Correcting your instructor

Steps to Succes

1. Plan Your Prank Well
2. Keep a Straight Face
3. Execute